trap testing. Although defective steam traps can waste thousands of dollars annually, their maintenance is often overlooked. Presently, estimates for steam trap failures within industrial facilities is 50%.

Considering that medium sized facilities can have hundreds of traps, the potential for energy savings is considerable.

Combining thermal imaging with contact ultrasonic testing provides a quick and efficient means for locating defective steam traps. Through timely, effective repairs, companies can realize considerable energy savings and reduced emissions.

Infrared inspection of steam traps is one of the many topics covered in the Level I Infraspction Institute Certified Infrared Thermographer® training course. Level I classes are held regularly throughout the year or may be accessed via our convenient web-based Distance Learning program.
